

Before

Fairykind has always been a long-running mystery that has never been interpreted correctly. No one has ever known exactly what has created fairies. Not the innocence of childlike wonder, big imaginations, or the fantasy of meeting one. These small-winged creatures have truly never been anything but a mystery.

Many do not believe that they are even real. As if seeing something confirms its existence. Is seeing believing, or is it just mere observation? The other misconception is that fairies are kind creatures that are loving and tend to all things - a thought that only a human ignorant to their own world can behold. The world everywhere is a messy pendulum swinging between good and evil, a large mass of gray area that has yet to truly be critiqued and fixed. Fairykind is the same way.

To understand the world of fairies, you have to understand that they are deeply conflicted creatures. Trying to uphold their reputation as pure beings, however consistently making the wrong decisions, and underestimating their power to levels of danger. But do not misunderstand them as being dumb. They have only existed within their land, to protect the humans causing the same trouble as they are in their world. For to be seen by a human is to subject that human into becoming a fairy. Fairies now are far less birthed, and moreso made into what they have become. Many humans have fallen trap to their own curiosity, seeking fairies only to be transformed and trapped into their world, everyone else believing they just went missing. Keeping all their own memories as everyone else slowly forgets them.

Fairykind in it's glamour may seem to be the ideal way to live. An immortal, with sparkling wings, and joyous whimsy. But be warned. It is nothing short of a vicious trap that you can not escape from. Being lured in by glitz and glamour to never escape, and lose yourself and all you love forever.

To avoid an immortal life away from all you know and love, when you see a sparkle in the wind, keep feining ignorance. Keep blinking and believing something was just in your eye. Don't get curious, don't follow the path, and whatever you do, don't reach out to touch it. Some say it is dramatic to be wary, and alarmed, but one touch is all it takes to ruin your life forever. Atleast, that's what happened to Vivienne Quinn.

Tracked Changes

Many do not believe that they are even real, as if seeing confirms existence. Is seeing believing, or is it just mere observation? The other misconception is that fairies are kind, loving creatures who tend to nature— a belief only a human, ignorant of their own world, can behold.

In truth, Fairykind is a ~~has always been a long-running~~ mystery to humans; ~~that has never been interpreted correctly.~~ No one ~~has ever known~~ how they came to be. It's best this way because, like humans, fairies are ~~exactly what has created fairies.~~ ~~Not the innocence of childlike wonder, big imaginations, or the fantasy of meeting one.~~ These small-winged creatures ~~have truly never been anything but a mystery.~~

~~Many do not believe that they are even real. As if seeing something confirms its existence. Is seeing believing, or is it just mere observation? The other misconception is that fairies are kind creatures that are loving and tend to all things -- a thought that only a human ignorant to their own world can behold. The world everywhere is a messy pendulum swinging between good and evil, a large mass of gray area that has yet to truly be critiqued and fixed. Fairykind is the same way.~~

~~To understand the world of fairies, you have to understand that they are deeply conflicted creatures. Trying to uphold their reputation as pure beings, however though consistently making the wrong choice decisions, and underestimating their power to dangerous levels of danger. But do not misunderstand them as being dumb.~~

~~They Fairies have only existed within their land, to protect the humans, causing the same trouble as they are in their world. For but to be seen by a human is to subject that human into becoming a fairy. Fairies now are far less birthed, and moreso made into what they have become. Many hHumans often have fallen into a trap toof their own curiosity, seeking fairies only to be bounedtransformed and trapped into a new their world, while their loves ones soon everyone else believing they just went missing. Keeping all their own memories as everyone else slowly forgets them.~~

~~Fairykind iIn it's glamour, fairykind may seem to be the ideal way to live: An immortality, with sparkling wings, and joyous whimsy. But be warned. It is nothing short of a vicious trap— to be allured is to that you can not escape from. Being lured in by glitz and glamour to never escape, and lose yourself and all you love forever.~~

~~To avoid an immortal life away from all you know and love, Feign your ignorance. wWhen you see a sparkle in the wind, keep feining ignorance. Keep blinking and assume believing something is was just in your eye. Don't get curious, don't follow the path, and whatever you do, don't reach out to touch it. Some say it is dramatic to be wary, and alarmed, but one touch is all it takes to changeruin your life forever. At - least, that's what happened to Vivienne Quinn.~~

Accepted Changes

Many humans do not believe fairies are real, as if seeing confirms existence. Is seeing believing, or is it mere observation? The other misconception is that fairies are kind, loving creatures who tend to nature—a belief only a human, ignorant of their own world, can behold.

In truth, fairykind is a mystery to humans; no one knows how they come to be. It's best this way because, like humans, fairies are conflicting creatures trying to uphold their reputation as pure beings, though consistently making the wrong choice and underestimating their power to dangerous levels.

Fairies have only existed within their land to protect humans, but to be seen by a human is to subject that human to becoming a fairy. Humans often fall into a trap of their own curiosity, only to become bound to a new world, while their loved ones soon forget them.

In its glamour, fairykind may seem the ideal way to live: immortality with sparkling wings, and joyous whimsy. But be warned. It is nothing short of a vicious trap—to be allured is to lose yourself and all that you love.

Feign your ignorance. When you see a sparkle in the wind, keep blinking and assume something is in your eye. Don't get curious, don't follow the path, and whatever you do, don't touch it. Some say it is dramatic to be wary, but one touch is all it takes to change your life forever. At least, that's what happened to Vivienne Quinn.